Between 2001 and 2005, USAID provided technical assistance to the Government of Romania to assess national and basin-level capacity to collect and manage water and climate information and integrate real-time data into decision support systems related to floods, water allocation, water quality, and water works infrastructure. Under two sequential projects, DESWAT (DEStructive WATers) and WATMAN (WATER MANAGEMENT), USAID developed technical reports and financial strategies for a $250 million investment in improved water management for Romania's twelve river basins.
